Their Early Lives. GENERAL CLARKSON'S ACCOMPLISHED HELPMATE-

The detail work of rehabilitating a civil army of over 60,000 postmasters requires political and administrative generalship of the highest order. The so-ciety people of Washington will find in the wife of the first assistant postmaster-general a lady who will in every way honor the social life of the administration and will be a leader in the second rank in the scale of statutory dignities. Mrs. Clarkson was Miss Anna Clarinda Howell, named after her two aunts, and daughter of Dr. J. G. Howell, formerly of Springfield, Ohio. She was born at Urbanna in the same state, where her father was practicing medicine at the time of that domestic event, Owing to the death of her mother she was reared by her aunt, Mrs. Judge Halsey, of Springfield, Ohio. Her father removed to Pella, a settlement founded by a company of Hollanders, and so named as a place of refuge commemorating an event of bible history. Upon reaching the age of fourteen. Miss Howell, who had now grown to be a beautiful girl, left the home of her childhood and joined her father at Pella, where he had built up a lucrative practice. She very soon after entered the Central university of Iowa founded by the Holland settlers, and there acquired a liberal

Dr. Howell having remarried, his second wife was cousin to Mr. Clarkson. It was through this circumstance that the young people met, and being brought frequently into each other's society, there grew up that mutual respect and confidence which often leads to love and matrimony. In 1867 their nuptials took place at Pella, but the young couple went to Des Moines to make their home. Here Mr. Clarkson and

Two out of three nephews, Moses, Saul and Eli, perpetuated the holy calling in the family. The first, Moses Montgomery Henkle, born in Virginia in 1798, became an itenerant minister in 1819, as a missionary to the Wyandotte Indians, and preached the gospel in Ohio, Pennsylvania, Kentucky and Alabama. He established a religious magazine, and in 1845 associated himself in the editorship of the Christian Advocate, at Nashville. In 1847 he established the Ladies' Companion, and later taught in Philadelphia and Baltimore. During the civil war he passed through the lines and died in Virginia, while Grant's battalions were fighting the battles of the Wilderness. GRANDFATHER HENKLE.

His brother Saul, Mrs. Clarkson's maternal grandfather, born in Nashville, Tenn., removed to Springfield, Ohio, towards the close of the first quarter of the century, having been ordained for the ministry. > The great idea in Easter gifts is to exercise your own ingenuity; to give it an Easter touch by designing something novel yourself, not so much in the gift itself, which can be anything you like, from a parasol to a folding bed, as in the way of giving it, or the little details of the design; your parasol can be painted in Easter lilies, and your folding bed must have a nest of eggs, even if they are only the common hard-boiled variety, temporarily ornamenting its Corinthian capitals or its organ-like key board. The proper time to give Easter presents is at breakfast. Breakfast is the Easter meal as much as dinner is the occasion on other festal days. purse and the taste of the breakfasters dictate, and at each plate are each person's presents. Mrs. William Astor has ordered several hundred dollars' worth of flowers for the Easter decoration of her house, and the arrangement is to be rather novel, as lilies are to be used almost solely, with only an intermixture of azalias for a touch of color. The breakfast table, however, is to be ornamented wholly with white and pink azalias, because they having no odor are particularly agreeable as table flowers. At another Easter breakfast the experiment is to be made of having eggs and eggs only, in varied forms, as the basis of the meal. Happily the ingenious hostess thinks this arrangement does not preclude the indulgence in most easily achieved by the amateur, and all sorts of pretty arrangements can be made with them. To my mind the basket I saw last year sent to Mrs. Frederick Freer, the wife of the painter, by her friend, the wife of another painter, Mrs. Walter Shirlow, was even pret-tier. I don't know whether or not it was of home manufacture, but it might easily have been. WOMEN ORDER A LUNCHEON. The Difficulty of Making a Choice-How it Looks to a Waiter.

From the New York Tribune. Two young women enter a well-known uptown restaurant for luncheon. As they sit down one of them begins to tell how hungry she is, while her companion echoes her sentiments with fervor. "I thought we should never get here," says the first. "I am actually faint," says the second, "and I am going to eat and not talk a bit." Each of them seizes a bill of fare and begins to look it over. The first runs her eye up and down the sheet, evidently in doubt. At times she pauses for a moment as if she had decided what to order, but she seems to find nothing satisfactory. Her friend has begun an entirely different examination. Starting at the top of the list, she goes down it slowly, examining everything carefully. It seems as if she were sure to hit upon a choice. When she reached the last word on the last page, she looks up and sighs. "What are you going to order?" she asks with an air of resignation. "I am sure I don't know," is the discouraging reply.

The waiter, who has been standing stock the waiter, who has been standing stock still, moves his feet a little uneasily. "Let's begin on the soups, Jen," says one, and they fall to studginy the soups. After a pause, the one addressed as "Jen" suggests in an apologetic manner mock-turtle soup. "Oh," says the other, "I thought tomato would be nice."

"Well, then, I'll order mock-turtle." "But I don't want mock-turtle; you know I don't. I won't have it." The waiter moves off silently just in time for them to turn and see his back. "Isn't this vexing," says the one who had suggested mock-turtle soup. "I shall make a complaint about that man." Then co nes a dignified pause, followed by a respectful cough to remind them that their order is still hanging fire.

"Then," says one, "let's just have some plain consomme;" and consomme it is.

After the waiter returns with their order each says that she hopes that the other is satisfied. The waiter goes away and returns three times to get the rest of the order. He tries the shuffling of feet and the changing of positions, but they have finished their soup now and are discussing gowns. Finally the waiter has recourse to the respectful cough again, and they both look up.

"Oh, what shall we have next?" asks "Jen." "It's such bother to order. I wish papa were here. He doesn't have any trouble.' "I don't feel very hungry now, any way. Suppose we don't wait any longer, but go around to get our hat."

"All right," gratefully. "Let me pay for the check; I have just the amount. "No, let me; I want to get a ten-dollar bill changed." "No, I insist."

Another pause and another cough. The waiter takes the check and the money and starts for the cashier's desk. In a moment he is back again. "The quarter is punched," he says with "Oh, Jen, now you will have to get the bill changed." "Jen" hunts around for her purse, finds it

she spent the ten-dollar bill down-town. "Here's five, any way," she says with great satisfaction, and the waiter goes off again. Having gotten their change they talk for five minutes more, trying to decide whether they shall go to look at the hat after all or go up to get "Amy." They finally decide upon the hat, and as they move toward the door the waiter picks up the punched quarter they left for him and leans against the wall with a sigh of relief. WANTED TO JINE.

How a Tar Heel's Mormon Trip Was Interrupted.

From the Detroit Free Press While waiting at a station in North Carolina one day I was joined by a man who carried an old-fashioned satchel on his shoulder, and who had evidently walked many miles through the mud. He was fully sixty years of age, scrawny and homely, and he simply nodded to me and sat down on a bale of cotton. In about ten minutes along came a woman in homespun, fully his age and about as homely. She had also had a long walk. She nodded to me and sat down on another cotton bale. Not a word was said between us for ten minutes. Then, as the whistle of the train was heard in the distance, she said to the man:

"Then, Jim, you ar' gwine off ter jine the Mormons?" "I am, Hannah," he replied.

"And I'm to be left?," "Yes." "And it won't do no good to argufy?" "Not a bit." "Wall, then, good-bye to you." She started forward with extended arm, but

"An' you won't take me?"

assed his hand and seized the satchel and flung it thirty feet away. Then she grabbed him by the hair and they went off the platforn into a mud hole together, and as the train moved away she was on top jamming his head into the old gold soil and saying between the "Want to jine the Mormons, do you? "Then may Heaven help us," sighed Mr. Man, as he laid the paper aside, "for nothing else will." "What is the matter now?" asked Mrs. Man.

"Matter enough; the theater managers are going to compel the ladies to take off their big hats during the performance."

In the house of commons Monday, Mr. Goschen, chancellor of the exchequer, introduced the budget. The revenue for the year exceeded the estimate of the last budget by £1,645.000. The expenditures were £941,000 under the estimate, leaving a surplus of £2,586,000, the largest amount since 1873. It is calculated that largest amount since 1873. It is calculated that the revenue for the current year will be £85,050,000 and the expenditures £86,967,000, making a deficit of £1,917,000, caused by increased army and navy expenses. The deficit will be met by taking £1,000,000 saved last year and putting an additional tax of 1 per cent. upon the death duties on estates of the value of £10,000 and upward, and adding a duty of one-fourteenth of a penny upon every gallon of beer.
